Mary Pipher definitively lays out something missing in much of our society, the shelter of each other. The book expounds on the distance people in our country are separated from their families and the subsequent results. I was touched by this book on many levels, professionally, personally, and as a citizen.

The Shelter of Each Other . A homily by Rev. Fred Small . First Parish in Cambridge . September 12, 2010 . Nine years ago yesterday, on an astonishingly beautiful Tuesday morning, death rained out of the clear blue sky. On September 11, 2001, thousands were killed in the blink of an eye, and our nation and our world have never really recovered.

As panic ensues, the doctor locks himself and his family into his shelter. The same gathering of friends becomes hysterical and now wants to occupy the shelter. All of the previous cordiality is now replaced with soaring desperation; pent-up hostility, searing racism, nativism, and other suppressed emotions boil to the surface. Stockton offers his basement to the guests, but the shelter itself has sufficient air, provisions, and space for only three people (the Stocktons themselves).

Being in the shelter of each other ensures that each of us is a check and balance on all of us and all of us are checks and balances on each of us. That proverbial observation that â€œhumility is the beginning of wisdomâ€• is an understatement. Humility is not the same as doubt; it is rather an acute awareness that we are flawed.
